

Janine Gerber, January 2019

These are some words to the subject of a content of our common project, touching aspects of the third generation...

and see Merav's words at Facebook which

I want to contribute...

„To put layers over history, and opening the space to let coming light through... as Leonard Cohen said in his song: „there's a cut in everything, that's how the light comes in..."

My grandparents suffered from the war, both sides... mothers who stayed at home, fathers who died or came back traumatized... giving it further to their children... my parents... who didn't know how to handle and weren't aware what education made with them...

and we as third generation feel something we can't describe, but it's rooted deeply inside...

a kind of sadness... and faint... but also the feeling of humility for the past, present and future... to trust in humanity...

It's hard to describe but through art there is a language... we all can understand if we are open... and let the light coming through."